Surveillance Systems Integration Announces New Seattle Office and Branch Manager

SSI eyes the Pacific Northwest in expansion plans

(Roseville, CA) February 15, 2012 - Surveillance Systems Integration (SSI) announces the opening of its newest office in Seattle, Washington as part of its ongoing expansion strategy, and named Bill Young as the new branch manager. The Seattle office will be the hub for the company in the Pacific Northwest. The office is now officially open and has already started operations.

"There is a dense population of gaming properties in the Northwest and our new Seattle branch will provide superior customer service to our clients in the region," said Todd Flowers, President of SSI. "Bill is well acquainted with engineering surveillance systems, especially for casinos and the gaming industry and will be able to exceed customer expectations in his role as branch manager for us in the new office."

Bill Young, currently serving at SSI as the Director of Engineering, has an extensive background in designing and engineering casino surveillance systems. Having worked with SSI for many years, Mr. Young has a strong track record of overseeing gaming system design while also being able to effectively manage engineers working in other vertical markets. Previously, Mr. Young owned his own integration company and was a key acquisition for SSI.

"The Pacific Northwest is home to many gaming properties and we have many customers here already," said Bill Young, manager of the new Seattle branch. "SSI has some of the most advanced project management in the surveillance industry, and with our knowledge of the latest IP and high definition surveillance technology, we will be able to offer our customers the tools they need to enhance their security and update older systems." SSI is reaching its 10th anniversary this year, and was named as one of the Top 20 spenders in equipment and services in a study published in March 2011 Security Sales magazine.
